Love Tapes

What are Love Tapes? They are videotapes made by people from all walks of life who volunteered to record their feelings about love. Against background music of their own choosing, they face the non-judgmental lens of the video camera and speak candidly. Few have ever exercised their option to erase these personal expressions.

These tapes have had an extraordinary response when shown in schools, hospitals, libraries, museums, and over television. This particular selection has just been released for your use in psychology, sociology and human services. Among those you will meet are:

DARRELL, a black college student, afraid of love
FRIEDA, a disabled professor, who struggled for self-worth
ROSE, in her 80's, recalling her changing needs
JORGE, speaking lyrically in Spanish of his mother
DARLENE, unloved as a child, who finds that men treat her callously

There is a cumulative effect in watching one person after another on the Love Tapes. The net result is both an increased self-awareness and a growing ability to empathize with the common humanity of "strangers." In this exploration of the basic need for love there is a wealth of material for discussions on aging, parenting, the handicapped, and cultural diversity.

Welcome to Parenthood

Produced by
COLETTE VANDERLINDEN

Here at last is a film that speaks to today's generation about the rewards and sacrifices of parenthood. With rare candor, three articulate young couples describe the abrupt change in their lives brought about by having children.

- Michelle (married for five years and ready to become a parent) "I expected this great rush of maternal warmth and enthusiasm, but I didn't feel warm and lovely."
- Tom (who thought he didn't want children) "I have learned these three years with Jessica that children aren't always crying. They can be a source of pleasure and exert a positive influence on you as a human being."
- Karen (divides child care equally with her husband) "There are days when I wish I didn't have these responsibilities, but I don't let those feelings overwhelm me. I accept them as perfectly natural."

Welcome to Parenthood shows that having a family requires an investment of time, love and energy. The rewards can be enormous. This film will be invaluable in courses dealing with marriage and family, child development, and sex roles.

16 mm. color. 16 min.
Purchase $350. Rental $35.
